Antelope and Linen Straw
Are New Hat Fabrics

BY FLORENCE LA GANKE.

When is an antelope not an antelope? When it is black suede. Nancy knew the answer to this even though she was not visiting the shops these days. Nancy was clothes and style conscious. She kept up with things through advertisements and fashion magazines even though she was not wearing anything but negligees. She knew she would soon be out in the world again and she did not want to be behind the times.

So when her mother asked her about antelope she had her answer ready. More than that she suggested that her niece, whose wardrobe they were discussing, purchase a trim antelope hat for traveling. She chose black grosgrain ribbon for trimming. "Antelope also comes in pastel shades," said she, "but nothing is smarter than black."

As a dresser hat she suggested a fine straw in oyster white or beige. It was to have a medium size brim soft enough to give an irregular frame for the face. That type of brim is usually more becoming to any wearer. She suggested a deep, almost a navy blue ribbon for band trimming. This would go well with the linen puffed dress which her niece already had. Nancy knew that ensemble was still the thing.

Nancy knows about weddings, too. While her niece was not interested just yet you may be. Write to her care of The Detroit Free Press, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope, asking for her leaflet on "Weddings."
