Roger's Shelves and Closets
Grow Like Magic

BY FLORENCE LA GANKE.

Roger prided himself upon being a handy man about the house. Lois was glad she had been wise enough to pick out that kind of a husband, for her new home needed quite a bit of attention. Take the matter of closets, for instance. She did not have enough. "What woman ever does?" responded Roger sotto voce. "I believe their idea of a perfect home is one where there are nothing but closets."

Nevertheless he built one in the kitchen. A hood had been built out over the range and he discovered he could put a small one into that hood. It was painted inside with a pumpkin yellow paint. The inside of the doors were the same color. Then the shelves were edged with black and held odd bits of pottery. It was a closet for effect rather than use but it served its purpose nobly.

A small shelf seemed to grow like magic under Roger's hammer and saw. Lois wanted a shelf which could be put up on occasion or slipped down against the wall when the kitchen was crowded. This drawing shows you what Roger built for her. The shelf made a wonderful place to cool cakes or pies or cookies. Lois even essayed home baked bread and cooled it on this shelf after she took the crusty loaves from the oven.
