

What to Do With 'Trip' Scraps

This shows how Mrs. Edna Draper utilized the squares which she had left over from her "Trip Around the World" quilt. The polka dot squares are the same throughout the quilt, the small squares and triangles being different.

She Made Her First Quilt When Seven Years of Age

By EDITH B. CRUMB.

WHAT to do with the pieces left over from a "Trip Around the World" quilt was a puzzle to Mrs. Edna Draper, 13974 Monte Vista avenue, Detroit, but finally she designed a block like that shown in the illustration and when she has a quilt made from it she will have one from an original design and at the same time utilize all of her scraps.

The only blocks which are the same throughout the quilt are those which have the polka dot design and these are from material with a medium blue background and small white polka dot with tiny speck of red in the center of each dot.

These patches were cut three inches square, the patches from the "Trip Around the World" were two and one-fourth inch square and then there were small triangles made by cutting a two-inch square in two diagonally. The finished block measures 12 inches square.

When Mrs. Draper was a little girl she lived on a farm and in the neighborhood were several little girls and, fortunately, all of these little girls liked to sew and make quilts. So Mrs. Draper made her first quilt when she was seven years old. The little girls in her sewing circle begged and exchanged patches, met afternoons and made quilts. Mrs. Draper said that her quilt was a Flat Top design, being easy to make and very effective, because only one patch of a kind was included.

For Wedding Gift.

I've wanted to join the Club for a long time but always hesitated because I had no quilt started, but now I have and I will start more when I finish the first one.

I intend to make a quilt for a wedding gift. I thought of the Dresden Plate made up in all the pastel prints. Doesn't that sound pretty?

Evolution of Pie Shown in Exhibit

Students' Samples Trace Pastry Back to Ancients.

The evolution of the American pie was unfolded recently to a cooking class at the Pratt Institute, Brooklyn. Samples, baked by students, were exhibited, showing its beginnings in the tiny "pasties" made of the hunt from small game and eaten by both the Romans and the Vikings in the Dark Ages.

"Flams," tiny tarts filled with jelly, were developed by the Scots about 1500. Then came the substantial meat pies of the English. Over on the Continent, the French, influenced by a queen from sunny Italy, where pies, or "pighes," were a favorite, were creating their own version. This was an elaborate tart the size of the ordinary layer cake of today.

Holland was developing the pie according to its national palate and
