Institute Resumes Programs

DETROIT'S own Joe Conti, youthful Hollywood actor whose most recent role is in the just-completed production "East of the River," to be released in Detroit in January, will appear in person on the Homemakers Conference program next Tuesday at 2 p. m. in the Auditorium Studio of WWJ-The Detroit News.

Joe will be interviewed about his life in Hollywood by Ella Gordon Smith, director of women's activities for the Home Institute. He will climax his act with a song and dance number. At the age of 12, Joe scored a hit on Major Bowes' amateur hour, and was offered a contract. His ambition is to follow in the footsteps of Fred Astair.

HANDWRITING EXPERT

R. James Callman, nationally known psychologist, will give a demonstration of the art of reading character by handwriting. Homemakers who would like to submit their handwritings for analysis should bring pencils to the Conference.

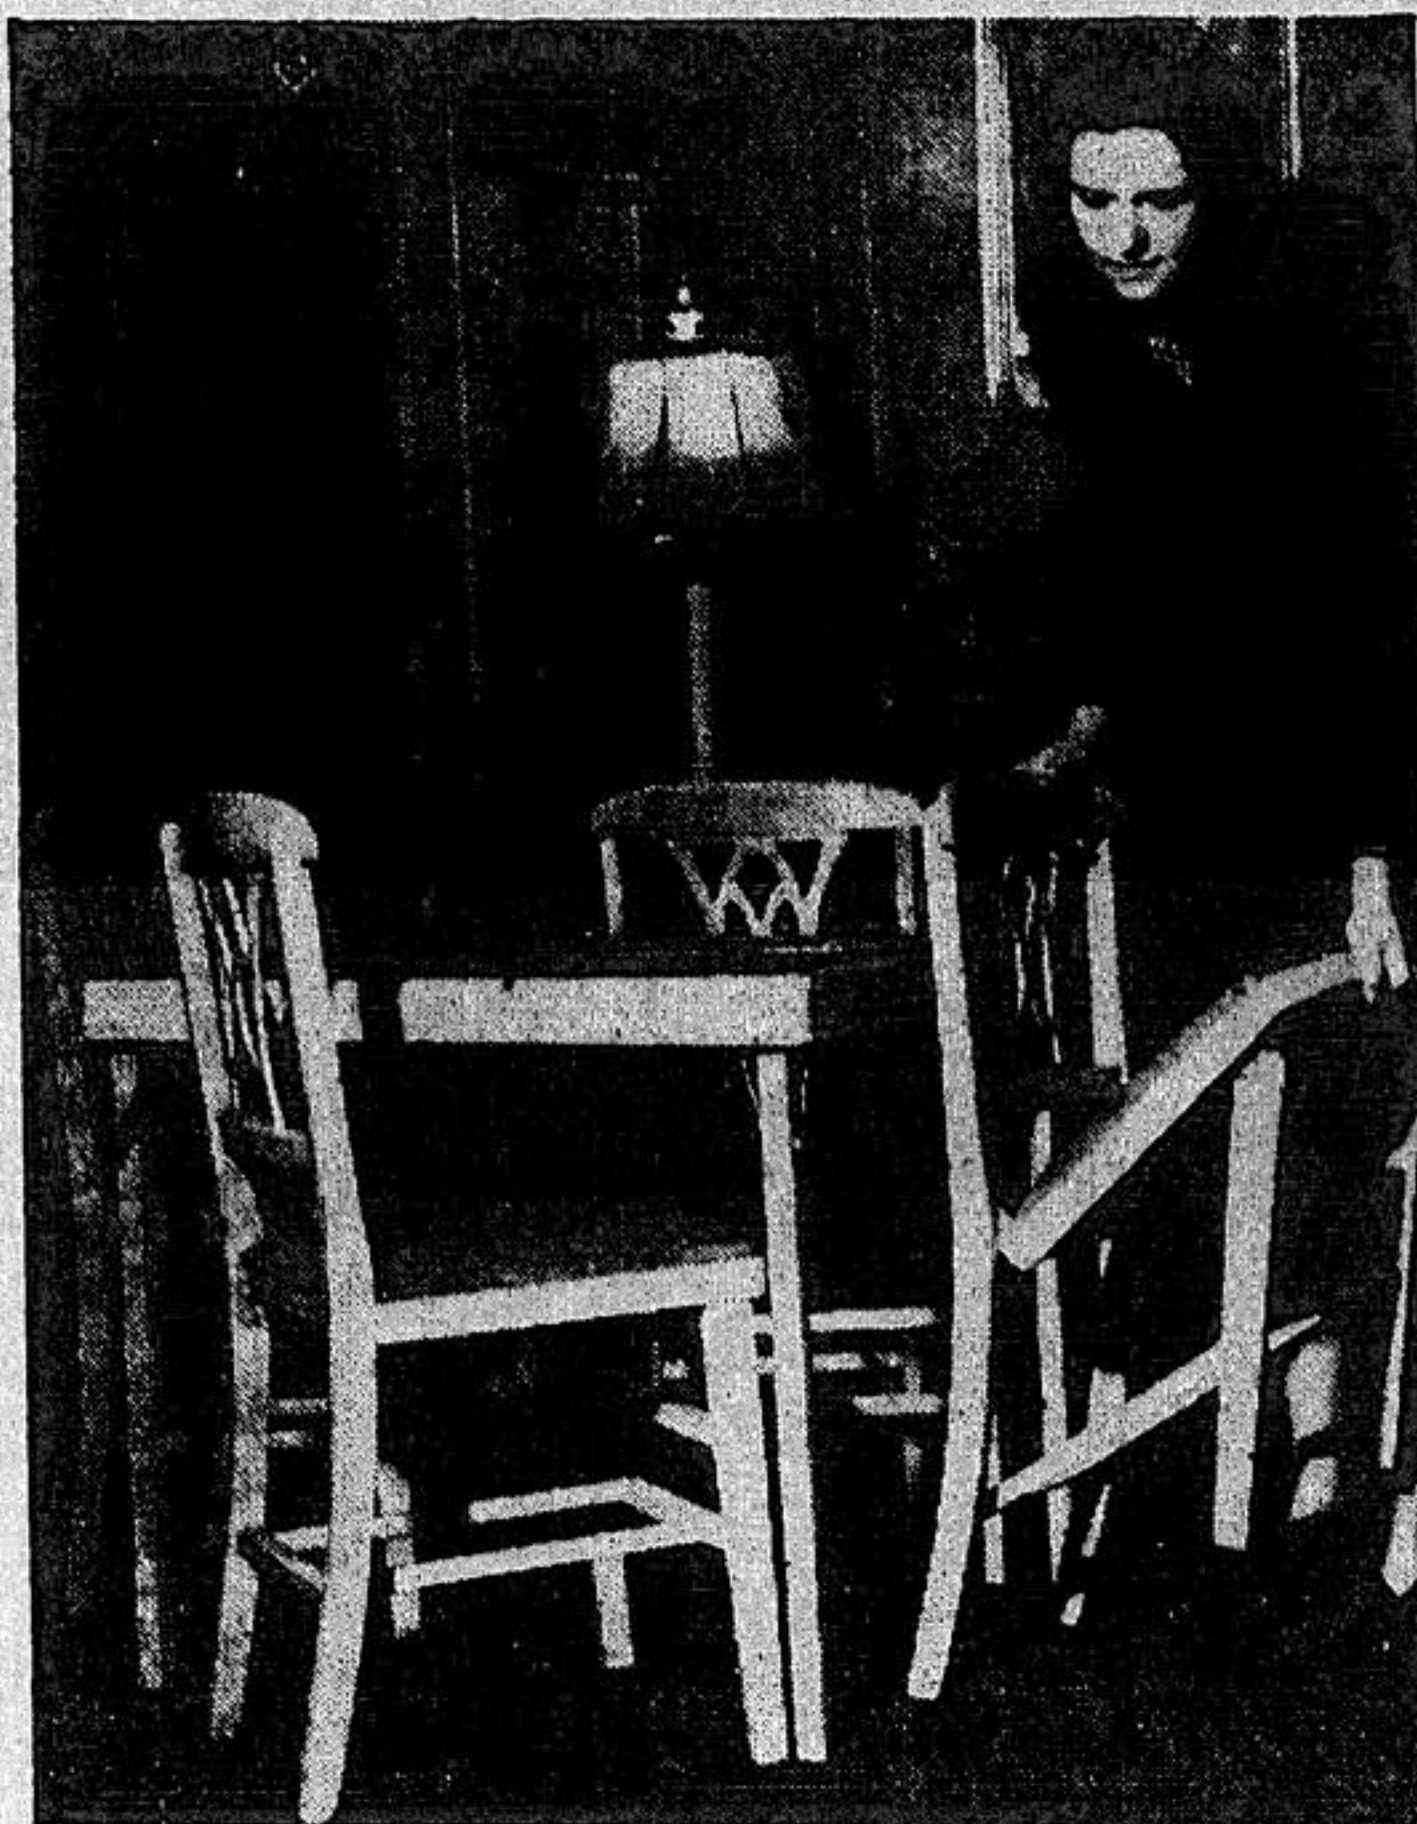

Preceding the audience participation, Callman will give a chalk talk on "What Does Your Handwriting show?" Coming to Detroit from New York, via New Orleans, Callman has been called "The Man Who Memorized the Bible." He can answer over 400,000 questions about the text. He was educated at University of Southern California and at Columbia University.

Jean McBride, director of The News Test Kitchen, plans to offer tips on "Making and Keeping a Budget." This comes as a climax to the New Year's resolution season, and Miss McBride will try to assist homemakers in actually keeping the resolutions about budgets which they so gallantly make at this time each year.

BAND CONCERT

A concert prelude is to be offered by the 14-piece band, "Wurlitzer Playmates," under the direction of Donald Mayberry. The 'teen-age musicians are Wil-

After-Holiday Menu

Tender, juicy roast of beef with simply served accompaniments is a welcome change after elaborate holiday menus. Tomato juice with a slice of lemon and a dash of Worcestershire sauce is a refreshing cocktail. Then serve rare roast beef with pan-roasted potatoes, broccoli with Hollandaise sauce, a mixed green salad, fresh fruit, coffee, cheese and crackers.

Wood Has Bleached Finish

By EDITH B. CRUMB

IF YOU are wondering what to do with that check you found in the tip of your stocking Christmas morning, here is a suggestion: How about a folding card table and four folding chairs?

An unusually attractive set is of wood throughout, in the bleached finish, and the covering of the chair seats and table top is of blue imitation leather—a medium bright blue.

This is an unusually comfortable folding chair and, at first glance, it does not appear to be the collapsible type but only a slight pressure is required to close it to a thickness of approximately six inches.

The table, with a double metal support at each corner, is substantial and so attractive are all five pieces that they are worthy of a permanent place in the home rather than being stored away in a closet out of sight between games.

For any one just starting out to furnish a living-dining room, the table and chairs might be used for the dining bay. The table will accommodate four comfortably.

These pieces are also available with red or white imitation leather seat covers and table top, but there would be a little wait for these as they would have to be ordered. The only color in stock is the blue.

Because this fabric is washable, the table is especially suitable for dining, though the set would be equally attractive in a sunroom.

The price of all five pieces is only $18.90.

Only 3 Stray Sheep

All but three students of a total enrollment of 696 at Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa., are affiliated with some church, a survey has disclosed. In this number are 21 different church groups. The largest number, 114, belong to the United Presbyterian denomination.
