Embroidered Organdie in Ruffles on Chairs

By EDITH B. CRUMB

SOMETHING gay and fascinating in the trimming of a boudoir chair is shown on the two types pictured today.

The petticoat embroidery of white organdie is just enough to make either of these chairs appropriate for a particularly dainty room.

The chair at the left is generously trimmed with two embroidered ruffles and beneath the lower one is a ruffle of plain material.

The flowered sateen cover has a luscious yellow ground with prim little nosegays in rose and green, and the plain underskirt is of plain yellow sateen. The tufted back and seat and the low tufted arms which are a continuation of the sloping side of the back all make this an unusually comfortable chair.

THE chair at the right would be a good reading chair because of its higher arms which serve as elbow rests. This chair is covered in a heavenly tint of blue with feathery leaves formed of dull white frosted dots. The material is also a sateen and the seams are welted. The single eyelet embroidered sounce around the bottom lends a pertness to the chair.

One woman has solved the problem of keeping the ruffles fresh by deciding to remove them and stitch snapper tape along the top so that they may be removed easily and quickly for laundering.

The flowered chair with the two ruffles, at the left, is priced at $28, and the one at the right is $26.

Costume Color

Mixing costume colors permits more sparkle and makes a costume more wearable. Try wearing a gold evening dress under a purple coat—with gloves in green. This year it's smart to make one dress serve many purposes.
